DETROLEUM.—It is necessary, upon the introduction of a new Medicine, to the notice of the public, that something should be said in relation to its powers, in hesiing disease, and the manner in which it acts. Man's organization is a complicated one; and to understand the functions of each organ, requires the study of years! But to understand that certain remedies produce certain impressions upon these organs may be learned by experience in a short time. It is by observation in watching the effects of various medicines, that we are enabled to increase the number of curative agents, and when we have discovered a new med-THE PETROLEUM HAS BREN FULLY
